A Summary of Your Rights Under the Fair Credit Reporting Act

The federal Fair Credit Reporting Act (FCRA) promotes the accuracy, fairness, and privacy of information in the files of consumer reporting agencies. There are many types of consumer reporting agencies, including credit bureaus and specialty agencies (such as agencies that sell information about check writing histories, medical records, and rental history records). Here is a summary of your major rights under the FCRA. For more information, including information about additional rights, go to www.ftc.gov/credit or write to: Consumer Response Center, Room 130-A, Federal Trade Commission, 600 Pennsylvania Ave. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20580.

- You must be told if information in your file has been used against you. Anyone who uses a credit report or another type of consumer report to deny your application for credit, insurance, or employment – or to take another adverse action against you – must tell you, and must give you the name, address, and phone number of the agency that provided the information.
- You have the right to know what is in your file. You may request and obtain all the information about you in the files of a consumer reporting agency (your “file disclosure”). You will be required to provide proper identification, which may include your Social Security number. In many cases, the disclosure will be free. You are entitled to a free file disclosure if:
 - a person has taken adverse action against you because of information in your credit report;
 - you are the victim of identity theft and place a fraud alert in your file;
 - your file contains inaccurate information as a result of fraud;
 - you are on public assistance;
 - you are unemployed but expect to apply for employment within 60 days.
 In addition, by September 2005 all consumers will be entitled to one free disclosure every 12 months upon request from each nationwide credit bureau and from nationwide specialty consumer reporting agencies. See www.ftc.gov/credit for additional information.
- You have the right to ask for a credit score. Credit scores are numerical summaries of your credit-worthiness based on information from credit bureaus. You may request a credit score from consumer reporting agencies that create scores or distribute scores used in residential real property loans, but you will have to pay for it. In some mortgage transactions, you will receive credit score information for free from the mortgage lender.
- You have the right to dispute incomplete or inaccurate information. If you identify information in your file that is incomplete or inaccurate, and report it to the consumer reporting agency, the agency must investigate unless your dispute is frivolous. See www.ftc.gov/credit for an explanation of dispute procedures.
- Consumer reporting agencies must correct or delete inaccurate, incomplete, or unverifiable information. Inaccurate, incomplete or unverifiable information must be removed or corrected, usually within 30 days. However, a consumer reporting agency may continue to report information it has verified as accurate.

- Consumer reporting agencies may not report outdated negative information. In most cases, a consumer reporting agency may not report negative information that is more than seven years old, or bankruptcies that are more than 10 years old.
 - Access to your file is limited. A consumer reporting agency may provide information about you only to people with a valid need -- usually to consider an application with a creditor, insurer, employer, landlord, or other business. The FCRA specifies those with a valid need for access.
 - You must give your consent for reports to be provided to employers. A consumer reporting agency may not give out information about you to your employer, or a potential employer, without your written consent given to the employer. Written consent generally is not required in the trucking industry. For more information, go to www.ftc.gov/credit.
 - You may limit “prescreened” offers of credit and insurance you get based on information in your credit report. Unsolicited “prescreened” offers for credit and insurance must include a toll-free phone number you can call if you choose to remove your name and address from the lists these offers are based on. You may opt-out with the nationwide credit bureaus at 1-888-5-OPTOUT (1-888-567-8688).
 - You may seek damages from violators. If a consumer reporting agency, or, in some cases, a user of consumer reports or a furnisher of information to a consumer reporting agency violates the FCRA, you may be able to sue in state or federal court.
 - Identify theft victims and active duty military personnel have additional rights. For more information, visit www.ftc.gov/credit.
- States may enforce the FCRA, and many states have their own consumer reporting laws. In some cases, you may have more rights under state law. For more information, contact your state or local consumer protection agency or your state Attorney General. Federal enforcers are:

A Summary of Your Rights Under the Clean Slate Act *

The Clean Slate Act (“the Act”) will seal old conviction records for civil purposes. A person’s conviction will be automatically sealed under Clean Slate Act after a waiting period, which is eight years for a felony and three years for a misdemeanor. During this time, a person can have no other convictions. The waiting period begins on the sentencing date, unless the person was incarcerated. Then it begins running once the person is released.

The Clean Slate Act will become "effective" on November 16, 2024. Once effective, the courts and various agencies will have up to three years to seal eligible conviction records. Every eligible conviction must be sealed by November 2027.

What Convictions are Subject to Automatic Sealing?

Under the Act, certain traffic violations, misdemeanors, and felonies will be automatically sealed after meeting certain requirements:

- Convictions for operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol or drugs shall be sealed after three (3) years;
- Criminal convictions for misdemeanors and felonies shall be sealed upon satisfaction of the following conditions:
 - *The conviction occurred at least three (3) years ago (for traffic violations and misdemeanors) or eight (8) years ago (for felonies), calculated from the date of sentencing or release from confinement, whichever is later;
 - *During that period of time, the individual accrued no additional criminal charges or convictions in New York State;
 - *The individual has not accrued any felony charges or convictions in the preceding eight (8) years in any jurisdiction;
 - *The individual completed any required probation or parole.

Convictions NOT eligible for relief include:

- The conviction is not a sex offense, a sexually violent offense (crimes that required a person to register as a sex offender), or a Class A felony, a crime where a life sentence may be imposed (excluding certain drug-related Class A felonies).

What Agencies Will Still Have Access to Sealed Records?

Sealed records will not appear on a criminal background check report. As a result, most employers will not see this information as part of a pre-employment screening. The Act does, however, allow access to sealed convictions for certain specialized purposes, such as:

- Law enforcement, prosecutors, and the courts: Records will not be sealed for the criminal legal system. Police, prosecutors, defense counsel, judges, and court officials will continue to have access to sealed records.
- Hiring police and peace officers: Any prospective employer of a police or peace officer will have access to sealed records.
- Gun licenses: Local, state, and federal agencies and officers conducting background checks for firearm licenses will have access to sealed records.
- The Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV): The DMV, as well as private transportation companies like Uber and Lyft, will have access to sealed records.
- Work with vulnerable populations, like children, the elderly, and people with disabilities: Sealed records will remain available to entities that are legally permitted or required to run fingerprint based background checks.
- The New York State Education Department (NYSED): Public, private, and religious schools legally permitted or required to run fingerprint-based background checks will have access to sealed records. NYSED will also retain access for specified disciplinary proceedings and background checks in enumerated occupations and licenses it oversees.

What is an Employer Permitted to do Under the Clean Slate Act?

Employers are still allowed to conduct pre-employment criminal background screenings. Although those screenings are permitted, they may exclude information regarding an applicant’s past-criminal convictions, including convictions that have a direct relationship to the work performed. Convictions for the most serious offenses, recent convictions, and convictions for which the applicant is still on probation or parole will still appear.

The Act also amends New York State’s Human Rights Law to prevent employers from asking applicants about sealed convictions or from taking pre-employment adverse action based upon a sealed conviction.

How Should an Applicant Respond on a Pre-Employment Criminal Background Screening if their Conviction has Been Sealed?

Applicants asked about sealed convictions may lawfully respond as if the conviction did not occur. Accordingly, applicants whose convictions have been sealed may lawfully answer “No” if asked on the employment application, “Have you ever been convicted of a crime?”

How Should an Applicant Respond on a Pre-Employment Criminal Background Screening if their Conviction has NOT Been Sealed?

For unsealed convictions, the employer will be allowed to ask the applicant questions about the conviction. The applicant will also be required to answer “Yes” if asked on the employment application, “Have you ever been convicted of a crime?”

Please note that for unsealed convictions, under current law, it is already illegal for an employer to discriminate against someone due to their criminal record. Employers may not use an applicant or employee’s unsealed criminal conviction as the basis for an employment decision unless there is a “direct relationship” between the criminal offense and the specific employment, or the conviction presents “an unreasonable risk to property or to the safety or welfare of specific individuals or the general public.”
